

TRUE

FALSE

As a spy, you must be able to understand what is true and what is a lie.
Test yourself, trying to guess!

In 1978 a Bulgarian author was killed with a poisoned pellet fired from an umbrella.		The CIA trained a cat for spying missions in the Soviet Union but it got run over before it could complete a mission.
The CIA made plans to kill Cuban dictator Fidel Castro with an exploding cigar.		Every four years the Spy World Cup is held in Russia where spies compete against each other over a range of tasks to see who is the best.
Spies sometimes say they work for government departments and make their jobs sound so boring, no-one asks them any more about it.		The CIA developed a miniature helicopter that looked like an insect to gather information in the 1970's. It was called an insectothopter.
Employees of MI5 and MI6 in the UK are asked to sign The Official Secrets Act to confirm their understanding of the law as it relates to national security.		The character of James Bond is based on a real spy and some of the stories are based on true events.
The Queen worked as a spy for the secret services during World War II.		An elephant called 'Serge' worked successfully as a spy for several decades in China.
Spies sometimes have surgery to give them new faces which helps their disguise.		Spies often carry a suicide pill which they can swallow to stop them giving away secrets if they are captured.
Children's author Roald Dahl was a spy during World War II when he worked in America.		It is believed that there as many Russian spies in London now as there were during the Cold War.
British Intelligence once hid a camera in a fake rock in a street in Moscow.		Spy guns have been made small enough to fit into pens, watches and even lipstick tubes.
Some UK government agency agents are issued with a 'License to Kill.'		There are university courses which train you to be a 'cyber spy'.
Information gained by Espionage was important in Russia's ability to develop nuclear missiles.		The CIA have used a robot fish to collect intelligence.

In 1978 a Bulgarian author was killed with a poisoned pellet fired from an umbrella.	The CIA trained a cat for spying missions in the Soviet Union but it got run over before it could complete a mission.
The CIA made plans to kill Cuban dictator Fidel Castro with an exploding cigar.	Every four years the Spy World Cup is held in Russia where spies compete against each other over a range of tasks to see who is the best.
Spies sometimes say they work for government departments and make their jobs sound so boring, no one asks them any more about it.	The CIA developed a miniature helicopter that looked like an insect to gather information in the 1970's. It was called an insectohtopter.
Employees of MI5 and MI6 in the UK are asked to sign The Official Secrets Act to confirm their understanding of the law as it relates to national security.	The character of James Bond is based on a real spy and some of the stories are based on true events.
The Queen worked as a spy for the secret services during World War II.	An elephant called 'Serge' worked successfully as a spy for several decades in China.
Spies sometimes have surgery to give them new faces which helps their disguise.	Spies often carry a suicide pill which they can swallow to stop them giving away secrets if they are captured.
Children's author Roald Dahl was a spy during World War II when he worked in America.	It is believed that there as many Russian spies in London now as there were during the Cold War.
Bristish Intelligence once hid a camera in a fake rock in a street in Moscow.	Spy guns have been made small enough to fit into pens, watches and even lipstick tubes.
Some UK government agency agents are issued with a 'License to Kill.'	There are university courses which train you to be a 'cyber spy'.
Information gained by Espionage was important in Russia's ability to develop nuclear missiles.	The CIA have used a robot fish to collect intelligence.